ASK THE expert

Q: I dread consultations with a new hair colorist because I never seem to get my vision across! Is there anything I can do to ease my communication woes?

—Sarah, Delray Beach

A: Absolutely! Knowledge is power, even when it pertains to your hair color. If you have a particular color tone and pattern in mind, the best thing you can do is find a photograph of the look you are interested in. Bringing in a photograph is superior because although your colorist is an expert in their field, words can be translated differently. A clear photograph can prevent any misunderstanding that could occur. When selecting a photograph of a color that appeals to you, pay attention to the skin tone and the eye color of the model who is wearing the desired look. If these traits are not in sync with your own, you may end up with hair that does not compliment your natural features and make you look washed out. Other important factors to keep in mind are your personal lifestyle and the condition of your hair. Your lifestyle is important to your color choice because exposure to sun and chlorine can lead to major color fading. Also make sure to discuss with your colorist the maintenance required for your desired shade and that it is compatible with your time, skin tones, and budget. Last but not least, discuss the damage risk involved in obtaining your new hair color because healthy hair is the best canvas for beautiful color!
